And the Lesson is Yours

While I have heard a decent amount of sermons, as I have been in ministry I not only listen to the message but the structure of the lesson, whether he does it all from memory or notes, and the general manner of presentation. One thing that is quite common to hear is something like, “One more thing and the lesson is yours.” What do we even mean when we say, “the lesson is yours” ?

When I present a lesson, as much as I may choose the sermon title and overall theme, the lessons that we draw from it are the Lord’s. I merely am the one to carry those points from the text to us. I think it is important to always keep in mind the power of God and His Word when hearing a lesson. When we talk about lessons it’s usually from a sermon/Bible class point of view.

God’s Word is so large and thorough I cannot imagine someone honestly saying they have learned everything they can from it. In a similar thought, we learn a great deal of lessons from life experiences and not just practical ones but spiritual as well. I pray to always do my part in presenting the Lord’s Word so that we can all learn much needed lessons from His inspired Word.

Whether it be at the end of a sermon, during Bible class, reading the Bible, or in the midst of many other things there will be many opportunities for lessons. In all of that there is a choice to make the lesson ours. God’s Word is still applicable and relevant today! The world may look a little different but the struggles of being human are the same and sin is still sin. How can we make it ours then? In my mind for the lesson to be mine or yours, we must apply it. So make each lesson our own and allow the Lord to empower us.
