JACK-O'-LANTERNS

by Ben Rominske, minister

As that spooky time of the year draws near one item is practically synonymous with it, a jack-o'-lantern. Whether you've had your fair share of carving them or just appreciating some of the intricate patterns, there is no denying how this time of year goes hand and hand with them. There are lots of creative designs people go for but I want us to think about the more basic ones.

Large or small pumpkins basic designs use basic emotions like a smile, a scary face, or a sad face. The big part of the jack-o'-lantern that drives every design is the light inside. You can use whatever light source you like whether it be candles or battery powered, but each has their pros and cons. Some may prefer the natural lighting of the candle but they can go out easily and require more attention. On the other hand, battery powered lights go through any weather, tend to be brighter but less natural, and don't cause hazards.

Light debating aside, think about each of us being a jack-o'-lantern. Depending on the day, our mood can be happy, mad, or sad. When we are joyful we have opportunities to shine the light of God to others. Similarly even in hard times and sadness we can shine light as well. It may flicker at times, but think of the impact we can make being bright lights to this world that so desperately needs to get out of the darkness.

Let us not forget about the negative looking pumpkins. If we are striving to be people shining the light of the Lord we must be careful of how we act. How will it look if people see us acting poorly in public only for them to learn we claim to be a Christian. No we are not perfect people but we must do our best to be faithful followers who control their thoughts, words, and actions. In a time of pumpkin carving and eventual disposal of our fun creations, I hope we can remind people of the light within us and of the one that provides the only eternal solution to decay.
